Harry Lowe's Paintings

A LARGE exhibit of paintings in the Gallery of Auburn's Biggin Hall recently attracted wide attention among campus art lovers to the unusual work of Harry Lowe, Auburn graduate of 1943, and presently an assistant professor of art at API.

The exhibit, which featured recent works of Professor Lowe, (see cuts) was opened with a reception by the local Art Guild, student art honorary. The highly complimentary reception came as a pleasant surprise to Prof. Lowe, who thought it rather unique that an organization which he helped found during his undergraduate days would honor him with a reception more than a decade later.

Works in the one-man exhibit included paintings executed in transparent water colors, oils, ink and casein.

Returning to Cranbrook

THIS summer, Lowe is returning to Cranbrook Academy of Art in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, near Detroit, where he will resume his studies in painting there. He is highly pleased with the opportunity of going back to Cranbrook, even though he anticipates a great deal of hard work.

"I've worked harder there than at any other time in my life, but one enjoys hard work at Cranbrook," Lowe relates proudly. Cranbrook, a highly selective school, accepts only about 90 students each term.

Unusually attractive

The institution, which has probably some of the finest facilities in the world, offers courses in painting and sculpture, as well as in design, architecture, ceramics, weaving, and metalsmithing. A unique school, Cranbrook is described by Lowe as one of the most impressive sights in the country. Modern buildings and the grounds that are covered by beautiful flower beds, fountains and lakes, make the campus unusually attractive.

Lowe has his own private studio in Auburn, where he does all of his painting. He has gone on sketching trips to Mexico, Canada, and Maine. On these trips he crams note books home across the street in front of the Post Office in Auburn. Lowe has named this painting "Summer Landscape," in which he used lush, summer colors.

Success of students

WHEN asked to name some of his most talented former art students who have won acclaim since graduating from Auburn, Lowe declined on the basis that he feels the success of his students can be attributed only to the combined efforts of the entire art department, and the efforts of the students themselves.

"We've had many students who showed tremendous promise, but no one instructor can claim credit for a student's success. Members of our department work cooperatively to see that each student is given the best training possible," Lowe remarked.

DURING a three-year stretch in the Army immediately following graduation,

TWO more of the numerous paintings in the large exhibit are shown in the Biggin Hall Gallery. At left is a study of imaginary birds and bird forms, and at right is a painting executed in ink and transparent water colors. The one-man exhibit attracted wide campus attention among art lovers in Auburn.

Lowe continued to paint, and some of his war paintings were exhibited while he was serving in Europe. On returning to the states in 1946, he came back to Auburn to devote his full time to painting.

After working toward his Master's degree for a few months, Lowe, a native of Opelika, joined the faculty in the art department where he has served since that time. He received his Master's degree in 1949.

McNair in wrestling, Ray in debating

Auburn Students Win Top Honors

AUBURN'S masterful wrestler Dan McNair, 200-pound heavyweight from New Orleans, recently became the first Southern athlete to capture a National Collegiate Wrestling Championship title.

There have been many national champions from the South, and Auburn has had her share of them, but McNair was the first to make the grade in the grappling game.

Wins National Title

DAN won the national title March 28 by defeating defending champion Gene Nicks of Oklahoma A & M.

The big victory climaxed a highly successful wrestling career at Auburn for the husky physical education major. Few times has Dan been beaten in the three years that he has dominated the heavy class in the Southeastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association.

In both his junior and senior years he went undefeated, and at the close of the last season notched his second Southern crown, the first having been won at the conclusion of his sophomore year.

Trys for Olympics

HE PASSED up his chance for the NCAA title last year, and entered the 1952 Southeastern Olympic tryouts at Davidson College. Victorious there, he went to Ames, Iowa, and the United States Olympic tryouts.

At Ames, he won his opening three falls but lost his fourth bout to Dale Thomas, a physical education instructor from Michigan State and Olympic champion from the United States. In hopes of making the Olympic squad, he challenged the great New York cop, Henry Wittenberg, undefeated in over 300 matches.

Wittenberg was awarded the decision

on merits of experience after the match ended in a draw.

Gives Coach Credit

DAN gives much of the credit for his success to his coach, shrewd Swede Umbach, the man responsible for building Auburn's present top level wrestling program.

Within one year after inaugurating the sport on the Plains, Umbach's boys had annexed the Southeastern championship, and they have won the title every year since.

AUBURN, with one of the finest debating teams in the United States, is becoming an increasingly important school in the field of collegiate debate.

During the school year 1952-53, the Plainsman debaters ranked near the top in every national tournament in which they participated, and had a member of the Auburn team, Denison Ray, serve as national president of Tau Kappa Alpha.

Outstanding record

QUITE an outstanding record has been accomplished by Ray, a senior in the School of Science and Literature who will graduate from Auburn in June. Much of Auburn's rise to the top ranks of national collegiate debating, can be attributed to the young Anniston student.

In the Notre Dame National Invitational Tournament held March 19-21, Ray was named the Outstanding Debater of the tournament as Auburn tied for second place with 297 points, one point less than winner Dartmouth. Ray collected 160 points out of a possible 180 in winning individual honors, while a debator from Bradley was second with 154.

Twenty colleges from every section of the country were entered in the tournament, Auburn being the only Southern school invited.

Top legislator

THEN April 23-25, dates of the National Tau Kappa Alpha Debate Tournament held in Denver, Colorado, Ray was named Outstanding Legislator in the Congress, and took second place in individual debating honors with 138 points out of a possible 155. Winner Don Wright of New Mexico was first with 143 points.

RAY . . . top debator

As retiring national student president of Tau Kappa Alpha, Ray presided over the Congress sessions as Speaker. Auburn won first place in the Congress, an actual legislative session patterned after the U.S. House of Representatives, by a wide margin over runnerup Utah.

In team debating competition, Auburn tied New Mexico for second place as Southern Methodist won the tournament. Southern Methodist handed Auburn her only defeat in the tournament, 50-48, as the Plainsmen gained four wins.

Twenty-three schools from every section of the United States participated in the tournament. Auburn, Florida, and the University of Mississippi were the only Southern schools in attendance.

E. B. Mell, '93, has collected

58,690 Indian Relics

AMERICA'S outstanding private collection of Indian arrowheads.

That statement, from a representative of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, sums up briefly the unique hobby of Edward B. Mell, '93, who has collected and catalogued close to 60,000 Indian relics in the past 25 years.

36 years at Athens

MELL, who recently retired from teaching after serving as principal of Athens High School in Athens, Georgia, for 36 years, now has one of the few hobbies in the country that is attracting national interest.

Many people from states across the nation are visiting the outstanding Georgia educator's collection, which as of April 16 of this year contained 58,690 specimens. Mell has his relics classified according to type rock, a miscellaneous group, and thousands that are still in the process of being grouped.

Won't dig in mounds

MOST of Mell's arrowheads have been collected from cultivated fields. Though he has been offered various opportunities to dig into mounds and graves, he refuses to do so.

Of the thousands of specimens, approximately 45,000 are projectiles such as arrows, spears, javelins, and blow gun points.

After graduating from Auburn, Mell taught as principal of schools at Mathews, Alabama, and Carlton, LOOKING over the more than 58,000 specimens in his Indian Relics collection is Edward B. Mell, '93, who has developed his hobby into the nation's outstanding private collection of Indian arrowheads. His home is in Athens, Ga.

Principal at Athens

HIS next position was that of principal of Athens High School, which he helped organize in 1907. From then until 1943 he was the only principal of the school.

Georgia, working one year at each. He then became principal of Baxter Street School in Athens, Georgia, where he served for 11 years.

In addition to his teaching responsibilities and his hobby, Mell has found time for professional, civic and religious organizations. He was secretary of Georgia Education Association from 1904 to 1906, was named president of Athens Kiwanis Club in 1939, and became a member of Bond Commission in Athens in 1943. He is also a member of the local Red Cross chapter.

228 years to church

MUCH of Mell's time and energy has gone to his church, the First Baptist Church in Athens. For a great number of years, he has been an outstanding lay-leader in his church.

The recent February issue of Christian Index featured Mell as one who had given a total of 228 years of service to his church. The article quoted Dr. Howard Giddens, who on a recent occasion read a tribute to Mell, pointing out his long term of service.

"He has been a member of our choir 65 years. He was assistant superintendent of the Sunday School two years, and superintendent 32 years. He has been deacon for 40 years, Sunday School teacher for 36 years, and clerk of the church for 53 years. Add these up and you have a total of 228 years!"

First baseball team

BORN on the campus of the University of Georgia, where his father was Chancellor, on February 27, 1973, Mell attended the public schools in Athens.

At Auburn, Mell lived with his brother, Dr. P. H. Mell, Jr., who was a professor at Auburn. To small for football, he tried baseball, and was a pitcher on Auburn's first baseball team in 1892. Dr. George Petrie, who taught Mell history, organized the team, played on it and coached it, according to Mell.

Though he remembers vividly several of his teachers at Auburn, including President Leroy Broun, Dr. C. C. Thach, and Dr. Lupton, Mell names his brother, Dr. P. H. Mell, as his best teacher. However he has high praise for all of them.
